

The crash of a UFO or Time Traveler in 1790 in France

This strange case surfaced back in 1975 and could have been the first official historical evidence that aliens flew on Earth or traveled in time on Earth in past centuries. However, alas, having slipped through several newspapers, this story was safely forgotten and now you will not find any mention of it even in Wikipedia.

Report

So, a certain Italian ufologist named Antonio Fenoglio in the 1960s visited the archive of the French Academy of Sciences in Paris and came across an interesting report about the crash of a spherical apparatus with a human passenger inside. In 1975, astronomer Jacques Vallee told reporters about this discovery of Fenoglio.

What was this report talking about? The fact that in 1790 the Paris police inspector Libefe was sent to the city of Alençon to investigate a highly strange event that happened there. Libeff visited the city, interviewed eyewitnesses and compiled this very report.

“At 5 am on June 12, several farmers saw a huge balloon in the sky, which was surrounded by a flame of fire. At first they decided that it was a balloon (several years earlier, the Montgolfier brothers had caused a sensation with their first balloon flights). However, this balloon flew much faster and made an unusual whistling sound.

Flying over the top of the hill, the ball slowed down and fell down, destroying a field of vegetables. The heat emanating from him was so strong that the grass and the tree on the edge of the field caught fire. The peasants began to extinguish the fire and prevent it from spreading to other fields, but even by evening, this ball was still very hot.

And then an extraordinary event occurred, as evidenced by two mayors, a doctor and three other respected local residents, along with dozens of ordinary peasants. This area was completely unaffected by fire and fall and was large enough to accommodate a large crew. The gawkers surrounded her from all sides, and suddenly the door opened in the sphere and from there above the people.

He was dressed in a strange way in a body-fitting suit and said a few words that the crowd did not understand, after which he rushed to the forest and disappeared into it. The peasants dodged the sphere when it happened and it saved many lives, as the sphere soon exploded and its burning debris scattered across all fields. And when they burned, nothing was left of them except grayish powder.

Measures were taken to find this mysterious man, but he seemed to have dissolved in the air. ”

Hoax?

The existence of this document was announced by astronomer Jacques Vallee, a respected scientist and ufologist, who once even spoke at the UN. According to Valle, all this is very similar to modern cases with UFO sightings.

The only question is whether the report itself exists? Valle reported that ufologist Fenoglio submitted his report on this discovery to him in 1967, but he himself did not see the original document. And it is not clear what kind of Italian ufologist this is and why he did not make a statement about the sensational report in the press.

The last time the mention of this report of Libeff flashed in 2006, it was allegedly delivered to the custodians of the archive of the French Academy of Sciences for special storage. However, later there appeared information that allegedly this report does not exist at all and everything is just falsification.

Anyway, it turned out that apart from the ufologist Fenoglio, none of the other people had seen this document and could not confirm its existence.
